A firm with the destination in mind

Somerset Smith Partners reaches 85 year milestone

It's an adage that has held true for Hawke's Bay's oldest wealth management firm, Somerset Smith Partners, which was established in 1934.

Over 85 years there's been some national and global financial turbulence but with just eight partners over this time, Somerset Smith has been able to draw upon their experience to assist many of their clients to financial success.

As Somerset Smith's current longest standing partner Andrew Pearson says the firm has not been transactional driven, instead focusing on building enduring relationships with clients.

"We have intergenerational clients, and still have a client that's been with us for 70 years."

"Over the years we have seen the good, the bad, ridden the ups and downs and the industry and experience that has led us up to quality financial advice and an outcome."

Andrew knows this only too well as his fellow partners Anthony Sabiston and Marilyn Lee remind him, having been with the firm since 1985 and experiencing the 1987 stock market crash, the tech bubble burst in 2001 and the Global Financial Crisis (GFC) in 2007.

"Connections in the market will happen but its people's responses that will make or break outcomes."

As Anthony says "Like the airline pilot we'll tell you when to put your seat belt on or when to relax, and we will get you to your destination."

Somerset Smith positioned itself well back in the 80s as it was one of the first to build its own computerised portfolio system, which

Investing can be like air travel, you need to know your destination, its mostly calm, there can be bumps along the way, but we'll get you there.

It developed with Napier based Napier Computer Systems.

"Back then our card system was dated but David Sewell (a former partner) and Andrew could see the advantage technology would provide so we built a system that enabled every trade to be instantly updated to a client's portfolio. It proved a major success for the firm and our clients as we could see at any time how a portfolio was performing and advise accordingly," says Andrew.

It's still at the heart of Somerset Smith's bespoke service and doesn't stray too far from the 1930s approach of founder Ward Somerset Smith, and carried on by subsequent partners such as son Owen Somerset Smith, Wes Bruce, David Sewell, Bill Dalton along with the current partners.

Anthony as the firm's managing partner says the firm's track record over subsequent years is attributed to its dedication to its founding principles and goals.

A commitment to provide individualised investment advisory services to meet the specific and unique investment needs of each client.

A paramount goal of providing the best combination of growth, income, risk and return, with a view to creating and maximising clients' wealth.

A traditional approach based upon our experience, expertise and sound judgement and success measured by many years of service to our loyal client base.

"We aren't a transaction based firm, advising on clients portfolios was an early speciality of

BUSINESS PROFILE

Hastings HIVE has businesses buzzing with excitement over a new co-working space!

A new-age approach to renting office space that provides corporate-level facilities for small companies has got the business community buzzing in Hawke's Bay.

From high-end offices, super-fast internet connectivity, hi-tech meeting and board rooms, a café with great coffee, a chilled water station with still and sparkling water and relaxing lounge area, to luxury bathrooms with showers and changing lockers, small businesses can now enjoy the trappings of a swish corporate office.

Rob and Jenny Gill bought the former Hastings Farmers store in 2018. The large building on the corner of Queen Street and Market Street was completely redeveloped and earthquake strengthened in 2014, becoming the National Operations Centre for KiwiBank.

Part of the building remained undeveloped until the Gill's identified an opportunity in Hastings for high-quality, shared workspaces. Rob says the complex, called Hastings HIVE, is based on the shared workplace concept pioneered in international centres like London and Toronto.

He says this movement, which is spreading globally, fuelled by a need for adaptable workspaces and a desire for better quality but shared resources, supporting modern agile work practices with intelligent design and the latest information technologies.

Rob illustrates why adaptable spaces are important: "Previously, we owned an IT business that was locked into a 10-year lease, ratcheting up 3 percent a year. This at a time when rents around us fell by up to 30 percent after the 2008 global financial crisis. We had to lay off staff as this lack of flexibility with one of our biggest fixed costs was really hurting us. It was a very stressful time to own a small business.

"Co-working spaces have been spreading globally, fuelled by a need for adaptable workspaces and a desire for better quality but shared resources, supporting modern agile work practices with intelligent design and the latest information technologies."

"So we were determined the i-space users would have some of the best working conditions and professional support available anywhere in New Zealand, so they can concentrate on their core business and leave the contextual stuff to us and our professional partners."

Being an i-space, the first partner on board was local ICT company Glenn Cook Technologies, whose job it was to ensure customers have the best and most resilient networking and internet experience possible. The ultra-secure hub also provides the new business with a secure cloud storage solution. "We'll, like most co-working spaces, HIVE, networking is available 24/7 for a fixed monthly rental plan. We've certainly gone to the next level with office fit-out," says interior designer Amy Henderson, who recently returned to New Zealand from working in London. "The design brief was to create a sophisticated workplace that provides small businesses the opportunity to work in an environment that usually only large corporates can afford. Fundamentally, people work better when they love where they work."

"What sets this i-space apart from co-working spaces I have seen here and overseas is the quality of the fit-out, the high-end products we specified and the craftsmanship on display. MCL Construction (based in Hastings) have done a world-class job," says Rob.

Local architects Fat Parrot have designed a highly functional space that users can adapt as needed but know that almost everything they might require is provided for, from fixtures and fittings to the café and lounge setting, meeting spaces and five-star hotel-like bathrooms.

This i-space, the first of many the Gill's says, offers a range of flexible workspaces to suit most uses and budgets, starting from a one-person i-desk up to larger i-offices sized from 20m² to 78m² and suitable for six to twenty people. All this, amazingly, with a 30 to 40 percent lower total occupancy cost than leasing your own office, with no long fixed-term leases or guarantees required.

"Success for us will be seeing our first i-desk customer move to an i-office," says Rob. "And that's the incubator opportunity that we hope will boost the local economy – it's about supporting people, growing business and creating jobs."
